Daily Appeal.

MEMPHIS, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1860.

VOLUME XI—NUMBER 282.

LETTER FROM BROWNSVILLE.

Brownsville, Tenn., Sept. 29.

According to a reporter, Mr. E. McClanahan, Esq., of Jackson, assistant editor for the State, addressed the citizens of Brownsville and vicinity on the subject of national politics and the probability of the claims of Douglass and Johnson, in the Phelps Hall, Tuesday night, the 27th instant.

The editor of the Standard of the town, and the visitors attending our circuit court, now in session, composed mostly by the learned and eloquent Douglass and Johnson, were present.

The large hall was well filled; and for one hour Mr. McClanahan harangued and delighted his intelligent audience with one of the most brilliant orations we have ever heard.

He uttered the most promising note of his age I ever saw.

His speech was characterized by bold, frank, argumentative, and forcible language.

His mind was full of knowledge and experience.

His voice was soft and musical, yet capable of the deepest intonations, and his person expressive.

With such a voice, equal to the highest demands of passion and inventiveness, he would be a match for any man in the world.

He has the most commanding presence of any man I ever saw.
